

Do No Evil See No Evil

The heading says it all; “Do No Evil See No Evil” This is what we get when we do wrong and live by sin. Our prisons are full of criminals, that dealt in drugs, gang members, guns, rape, murder, and home invasions. Living this way will only bring pain or worse to you and your loved ones. Adulterers end up in divorce, and a broken home for the kids, and some of these kids follow the way they were brought up. If you take drugs and live by the gun, you will most likely go to prison, or die by the gun. Most of us know of someone that lives by sin, and we see them suffer the consequences everyday. The truth is, if you live a life of sin, you'll never be happy, until you change.

If we do bad, than bad will follow us. If we do good, than good will follow us. It's common sense. Live right and get right in return. Live wrong and get wrong in return. I'm not saying that something bad wont happen to you because you live a good life, because not everyone is perfect, and things do happen, even to good people, but we all will suffer consequences for our own choices, good or bad.

The wrong choices we make in our lives, could someday affect our children and even their children. It's very important how we raise our children, so they live a good life. If we treat others bad in front of our children while their young, chances are that one or two of your children will do the same throughout their lives, and this can go on for generations, until someone breaks the cycle. I know of many friends that were from broken families without a dad, or a mother, and most of them ended up in prison or died very young because they did not have the guidance from two loving parents. I was very lucky to have both parents when growing up, but not without problems. My dad was an alcoholic, and raised hell when he was drunk. This has caused my siblings and myself problems throughout our lives. My oldest brother was an alcoholic, and this could have been handed down from my dad. I knew I wouldn't be an alcoholic, because I seen what it did to my dad, and brother. What we show our kids growing up can have a lasting affect on them throughout their lives, so it's very important how we raise our kids.

Another example, I had a friend when growing up, and his uncle robbed a convenient store across the street from our house. A few of my friends and myself were in the front yard when we saw this man run to his car parked in front of our house across the street. The man drove off and went to my friend's house where police had followed him, and before the man went inside the house, one police officer shot him. The man ran into a bedroom closet bleeding from his wound. He eventually gave up and went to prison for this crime. While in prison, the man was moved to a couple other prisons, and when he was moved to a Texas prison, the man broke out and killed a store owner during a robbery. This man is now on death row. Years later, my friend, the nephew of that man, got into a fight with a man, and he killed that man with a baseball bat, and spent over tens years of his life behind bars. What we do in front of our kids really matters.

When I was younger, I thought hell was on earth, and when you die, you went to heaven. Now that I'm older, I feel things are entirely different from what I used to believe. I do believe there is a God that will return one day, and we'll all be judged for all we've done on earth throughout our lives, good or bad.
